Educational Philosophy

We believe that ...

- young children's early years are foundational and crucial in the optimal development of each domain: spiritual, intellectual, social, emotional and physical.
- young children's development occurs in an orderly and predictable pattern.
- young children's developmental process follow s each child's individual timetable within a predictable range.
- young children's learning is optimized through active exploration, concrete materials, individual choices, play, movement and sensory exploration.
- young children need a learning environment that provides instruction within the context of the child's develop mental level.
- young children's growth and development is enhanced through a balanced approach to education addressing each developmental area.
- young children need opportunities for creative expression.
- young children thrive in a climate where they feel competent in w hat they can do.
- young children grow as Jesus Himself did in Luke 2:52, "Jesus grew in stature and wisdom; gaining favor with both God and people."
